

BARTONPARTNERS EMBRACES THE AGE OF GREEN

In late 2004, the U.S. Green Building Council (USGBC) revised its Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) Professional Accreditation Exam to promote a higher level of professional preparedness for those seeking to carry out green building projects. A more difficult test, however, did not deter BartonPartners' Jennifer Jones, who is passionate in her support of the numerous benefits of sustainable architecture, efficient building technologies and systems, and environmentally sound construction practices. On June 17, she successfully passed the exam and joined BartonPartners' growing team of LEED Accredited Professionals. Promoting buildings that are environmentally responsible, profitable and healthy places to live is not only Jennifer's goal, but an ambition of BartonPartners as well; they both have embraced the Age of Green where a higher understanding of LEED criteria is not simply encouraged, but mandated.
